KFAA Spring 2011

“ In the moonlight the garden became an enchanted place, the motionless, silent trees casting long, dark shadows across the lawn and the still bushes. After a great deal of bustle and chatter, the birds had settled down for the night in the dark foliage. There was not hardly anyone on the road, but occasionally one would hear a song in the distance, or the notes of a flute being played by someone on his way to the village. Otherwise the garden was quiet, full of soft whispers. Not a leaf stirred, and the trees gave shape to the hazy, silver sky.

Imagination has no place in meditation; it must be completely set aside, for the mind caught in imagination can only breed delusions.

The mind must be clear, without movement, and in the light of that clarity the timeless is revealed. ”
